UQ Gatton

UQ Gatton has steadily developed throughout its 120-year history, originally as the Queensland Agricultural College before merging with the University of Queensland to become UQ Gatton Campus in 1990.

The 1,068 hectare campus, located just under an hour's drive to the west of Brisbane, features a unique mix of historic buildings and modern teaching and research facilities surrounded by extensive agricultural land. It is also working towards becoming 'carbon neutral' with a wide range of sustainability initiatives, including the Southern Hemisphere's largest university-based solar research facility, which provides enough electricity for 1,000 homes annually.

UQ Gatton offers a diverse selection of programs, ranging from those related to agriculture (including sustainable agriculture, agribusiness, horticulture, production animals, wildlife and equine science), to
